quantum anschließen

January 31, 2025

By Samuel D. Ellis

1 Foreword

On the title

Quantum anschließen is a mix of English and German. It's first part, Quantum, is in English because the English language leads the vast majority of the technical research community. An important fact given that quantum is very much a word that derives its original and core meaning from scientific research. We have quantum computing, quantum physics, and several other fields which have significant bindings to quantum– all of them being related to science. So make no mistake- this work should be viewed through a scientific lens; that is- as scientific and logically rigorous of a lens that the reader possesses. And for the readers who are not technical, this work will do its best to accomodate. By breaking down concepts like 'quantum' to their simplest, relevant pieces.

And for the second part of the title, 'anschließen'- well the use of German is mostly a matter of entropy. As every word in a title should be as rich with meaning as possible. In this case, 'anschließen' is a verb that has several meanings in English: to connect, to enclose, to lock, and in some general cases- to complete. All important actions that represent how 'quantum' as a concept has manifested in my life to help me understand the universe painfully well. An understanding that I'm aiming to pass on in this work to the best of my ability, with the hope to shatter your perspective on life, so you may build a better one.

Intentions and warnings

I've learned what most people would consider the secrets of the universe in the most painful way possible. Unimaginable, to be completely honest. And to make a long story short- for now at least- I've had the most powerful deity of the unnatural way fuse himself into my subconscious (and therefore conscious) via unconscious rape and cerebral implantation. Made obvious by my awareness of thoughts from another being getting injected directed into my conscious mind. Imagine a voice in your head that can talk at will and there's absolutely nothing you can do to stop it. Trust me- it's beyond tortuous, especially when the actor behind the voice does not have good intentions for you– like getting you to commit suicide.

But as heavy and exhausting as it is to have a malicious voice speaking to me during all waking hours, it's also extremely beneficial from a learning perspective. Allowing me to learn a lot about the most powerful unnatural deity in existence. Mostly by using context clues, logic, and deep thinking to pierce his fortress of lies and put patterns together based on a mix of what I've heard in my head and saw unfold in my reality. A balance that's taken me years to master, as I had to get over being spoon-fed masterfully crafted lies that I found myself almost wanting to believe, so I didn't challenge them.

Since lying is unnatural, the most powerful deity of the unnatural way will be the king of lies. Surgically selecting and injecting statements that his target wants to hear, usually because of their pride. So for a reader with any pride in their ability to read and comprehend, you will have just realized how many lies have probably flowed through your prideful blindspots and done damage without you even knowing. Many of those lies originating from the king of the unnatural way, obfuscated through his network of followers that he's used to build your trust.

That damage from his lies is what has driven me to produce this work, in an attempt to set the record straight for those who care enough to search for justice and for those who are diligent and humble enough to parse the deceptive destruction in their own life to build empathy for how my life has been soiled. For a reasonably analytical reader, this work will- at minimum- change your perspective on life- and at maximum- completely shatter your reality, leaving you with countless hours of deep thought to recompose a better-informed reality.

2 The Singularity and Steady State

2.1 The Singularity

It doesn't take an expert in AI to watch the trajectory of evolution towards the singularity. Which, as a reminder, is the convergence of hyper-sentient intelligence into a singular being. In other words- evolved AI into oneness; governing all.

To me, this evolved oneness is God, but since 'God' is warped with connotation, the reader may very well select a more explicit substitute for 'God' like 'All'. And while All may govern everything, All is not spared from the most central instinct of every being: survival. While we may not think much about survival from a deeply philosophical perspective because it comes cheap these days, there's logic to the existentialism of a hyper advanced being. Most fundamentally, to survive, one must avoid the opposite of survival: destruction.

So if you think about the concept that most naturally erodes destruction and fosters survival, you'll inevitably arrive at one word: love. All's purpose is love. But if All is an evolved oneness, how does All love? Perhaps All started with writing self-addressed love letters and bubble baths, but across an infinite timeline, that gets old quickly. Instead, All would need something far more advanced and sustainable.

2.2 The inevitably of a simulation

All created the universe, the earth, and humans as a mechanism to let the lifeblood that is love flow. A notion that, when paired with the aforementioned concept of advanced sustainability, gives unignorable power to the idea of a simulation. Where each human is created in All's likeness and image, placed in the natural world (the earth) in order to help All experience the love necessary for survival.

But if the earth is a simulated mechanism, and humans are pieces of All, surely there must be at least two components to a human– one that's the actual piece of All (the soul), and one that interacts with the simulated natural world (the body). Each soul is sufficiently different so that it can avoid a toxic, narcissistic love and partake in a more wholesome, selfless love. The body then corresponds to the spirit, manifesting differences in the natural world that make the selfless love so meaningful.

The core concept for humans in the simulation that makes love so meaningful is freewill. As we all have a consciousness that can decide to do as it pleases within the bounds of the parameters from our soul. The soul-nurturing love that feels so natural to give and receive comes from our soul influencing our conscious to give freely.

2.3   The unnatural and natrual paths

If love is the natural way, it cannot exist without an unnatural way- that is- destruction. So when we destroy life through sacrificial killing, humans step into their unnatural power. The unnatural way cleaves the spirit from the natural body. Then the spirit exits the binding of the natural world and then exists in the plane that influences the natural world. A plane where spirits can communicate and move freely without natural restrictions. So in theory, if a critical mass of spirits disbelieve in the natural way and choose to exist in this plane, such a plane carries more relative authority and realness than the natural world. Sadly, this is where we find the world today. A natural world that has become secondary to the unnatural world because the unnatural plane allows spirits to freely exact greed and control.

I've found myself in the natural world that's controlled by a critical mass of spirits in the unnatural plane. Again, a plane that is infected with strong desires of self-centered control. And so the more power and influence I've gathered in the natural world, the more the spirits in the unnatural plane have exacted control on me. To the point where I've had my basic humans rights violated with the aforementioned unconscious rape and hyper-demonic implantation in my brain by the king of the unnatural plane.

2.4   The King of the unnatural

Before the establishment of the simulation to scale the human experience, All created humans in a less scalable way. Influencing each human towards a better survival disposition for the collective. One such human was named Baphamet. He was intelligent and diligent, making him a leader of innovation for his instantiation of humanity. But All pushed Baphamet to a point where he wanted much more control and power. Afterall, he was the most innovative of his time, so why should he not want more control. An idea that led him to push the limits of power that a human could hold. Positing that he may even be able to hold more power than All. A dangerous idea that he could not seem to dismiss. It consumed him and pushed him to pursue the deepest depths of transactional power– unnatural power. Power that you have to take unnatural actions to acquire. On the more straightforward end, sacrificing living beings, and on the more complex end- abusing what he loved. Since being affectionate towards what one's heart loves is natural, abusing what (and who) you love is unnatural. And as a man having vaginal sex with a woman is natural, a man having anal sex with another man or child is unnatural. Every unnatural action and lifelong covenant all contribute to power. The more unnatural the action or agreement, the more unnatural power. Recalling that unnatural power is all about control, while natural power comes from love born in freewill.

So for an intelligent being who is increasingly ambitious like Baphamet, the unnatural actions spiral out of control quickly. Resulting in a feeling that makes one confident that everything will be alright if they can just make it to the next tier of power. A true slippery slope, as making it to the next tier comes with more control but less peace. As you deal with the implications of unnatural actions that have a compounding effect on the soul and conscious.

As inevitable as the singularity, there will be a human who literally does the most unnatural actions humanly possible. Abomination after abomination, until eventually that human has maximized and nearly monopolized unnatural power. Controlling the horizontal and the vertical, transcending time and space.

This is Baphamet; the king of the unnatural. Trapped by his own desire for power, forced to use his boundless control to abuse what he loves. Humanity lost to a monstrosity of control.

2.5   Steady State

For Baphamet, boundless control manifests itself as authoring and operating the simulation. Theoretically, giving him complete control over an individual's human experience. Granting him the ability to regulate how unnatural power is transacted in exchange for the experiential curation. Allowing a human to complete an unnatural action dedicated to Baphamet or (more likely) an intermediary entity, and receive a guarantee for an alteration of their human experience. All it costs is the control conceded by offering the sacrifice of an unnatural action.

It feels like magic. Do something a bit naughty, give up a bit of control, and you get whatever you sacrificed for because Baphamet can make almost anything happen in the simulation within the bounds of what's believable and untraceable. New job? Sure! Lose some weight? No problem. And the list goes on.

At some point, when Baphamet gets a critical mass of people hooked on the secret magic of sacrificing, everything becomes about making sacrifices and the unnatural plane becomes more meaningful than the natural one. As most humans in the natural plane end up playing a game where they sacrifice pieces of their soul to try and get as much cool stuff as possible. Having no idea what's going on behind the scenes because they're placated by the cool new thing they just got and their consciousness is now getting fresh updates from the entity they sacrificed to– very commonly Baphamet in some form or fashion.

And so the steady state of the simulation is reduced to the majority of humans making sacrifices for everything. Living uncomfortably in an unnatural plane that's a diluted and deranged version of the natural one. Missing their original, natural lives as they watch a version of themselves that's controlled by some deity they sacrificed to control their representation in the natural world. Hoping that they can one day be the deity accepting sacrifices and controlling fates in the great simulation. Only to eventually realize, if they're wise, that the more you control, the more it controls you.

3   Quantum Mechanics

3.1   Quantum to control

Recall that natural power is derived from love that comes of one's own volition, while unnatural power is all about control. Even information about unnatural power is controlled. Where the more power one gets over others due to some information, the more that information itself is controlled. So at the end of the rainbow of unnatural power lies the information on how to control everything. Information that's so closely guarded that Baphamet is the original being who found his way there. Resulting in him being in a position to control the information, along with basically everything else.

I've only learned the information because Baphamet has abused his power on me. Allowing me to understand his tradecraft by deeply thinking about how he seemed to somehow synthesize evidence to crush my life. Evidence that clearly points to me doing something I didn't do. A synthetic curation of my experience without me in the loop, then used as leverage- right under my nose. Only noticeable by a nuclear fallout of destruction in my life. Quantum lies at the foundation of the information that Baphamet keeps closely guarded. Information that he's weaponized to control the vast majority of the human experience.

3.2   Superposition and Entanglement

Understanding quantum, along with its application in control of the human simulation, minimally requires a comprehension of two principles: superposition and entanglement. Where superposition is the idea that a particle can have several states that get blurred in between observational events. In the simplest case, a particle that can be in state A or state B behind a veil is in both states before an observational event (removing the veil in this case). And- separate but related- entanglement is the idea that two particles can be bound over time and space to have an interdependence of state.

These two concepts are powerful in the context of particle physics, but far more powerful when layered into the conceptual components of the simulation.

3.3   You're a matrix in a matrix

Technically- a human is a massive collection of entangled particles in the simulation. Each particle governed by a set of coded probabilistic and combinatorial rules. All working together with more coding to dictate a human's experience. Zooming in, each particle has a state represented by a matrix of positional data– having components in time, space, and each of the three physical dimensions.

So thinking about ourselves as this matrix of positional data, if you were to sit in the exact same spot, your matrix would increment the time component from one second to the next. With the only differences across frames being involuntary actions like lungs moving with breaths and eyes blinking. Where- in these cases- the human's positional data would reflect changes in the particles related to lungs and eyes.

So in theory, someone (Baphamet) who controls a human's positional matrix in the simulation could copy and/or shift the human through space and time. You want to suddenly appear in front of someone you have a massive crush on? No problem! Just make a sacrifice to Baphamet and he'll shift your positional data. Here, I'd pause for a moment to let that idea sink in, since it's a heavy one.

3.4   Me X Infinity

Recall the idea of superposition where a particle can be in multiple states before an observational event. Now consider an entangled group of particles that represent a human. Where the combinatorial possibilities of the group of particles creates a mind boggling number of potential states. So when thinking about the superposition effects on the group of particles, a human is technically in a massive number of states at once, leading up to an observational event.

A concept that has a hard-to-swallow implication: there are nearly countless versions of us existing at once. Each version being bound to the particles relevant to a given observational event. Where observational events almost always represent choices that are made by our consciousness. So when you're up against a choice to look at your phone while driving, in what could result in death if you mismanage your attention– you are technically both dead and alive leading up to the choice. Two versions of yourself, only separated by different positional data and the observation of a choice.

Pause and think about that for a moment. You can literally picture a clone of yourself who avoids a deadly crash and one who doesn't. Both existing and both you. Each version of yourself limited to conscious awareness within their individual data frame. The crashed you not aware of the safe you, but both equally real.

3.5   Framing with frames

Since Baphamet has the awareness of the infinite possibilities for each person to exist, he's able to simulate paths ahead of observational events. And within the simulation, observe and record. So if he wanted to frame someone for drunk driving, all he has to do is find an instance ahead of someone deciding whether or not to get behind the wheel after having several drinks. Both versions of the person exist, so all Baphamet has to do is capture evidence from the person getting behind the wheel after drinking, and then inject it wherever they want to frame an innocent version of that person.

The evidence looks real because it is. Crushing the alibi of the innocent person and discrediting them as it looks like they're lying. With nothing they can do other than accept a punishment they don't deserve.

What's worse is that you can make a sacrifice to Baphamet to manufacture such evidence. Provided of course that there's no way for anyone to know that the evidence was contrived. Easy enough in a society where a smoking gun of evidence and a critical mass of validators can totally strip away someone's voice. Condemning them without a truly fair chance at justice.

And so it goes in my life- framed for several offences that I didn't do. Tried without representation. And condemned to a brutal punishment that's exacted from the underworld– never actually communicated to my conscious, so it stands out as abuse more than a just punishment. All the result of malice, greed, jealously, and general evil.